Rating: PG-13

Genre: Action | Adventure | Sci-Fi

When space bandit, Peter Quill, steals an orb belonging to a powerful villain, he finds himself being chased by relentless bounty hunters. Under less-than-friendly circumstances, Quill meets four misfits and as he discovers the orb's true power, the intergalactic criminals have to come together to save the universe. The film has a whopping 83,871 deaths, ranking first by far. Did you know that before the final battle, the song Cherry Bomb was played on set as the characters made their entrances? Director, James Gunn, said it was to help the actors really get into character for the epic scene.

Guardians of the Galaxy, the tongue-in-cheek superhero movie starring Chris Pratt, has comprehensively topped a study of the deadliest blockbusters, thanks to an especially bloody finale.

The film sees the killing of 80,000 Nova Corps pilots in one of its closing scenes, which takes its estimated on-screen body count to 83,871 - that's 78,184 more

It might help to read the article. You see over 80,000 ships actually explode on screen when the Dark Aster crashes through them.

BILLIONAIRES LEAGUE

Billionaires are a rare breed, with less than 2,000 in the whole world. But how do they compare with one another? Which country has the most? Where did their money come from? How old are they? How many are women? How many dropped out of college? How many kids do they have? Find out all this and more using Gocompare.com's Billionaires League. Simply use the navigation menu to the left of the page to get started.

AVERAGE AGE

- Over the last two decades, the average age of billionaires has increased by 20 years.
- Combined with the self-made billionaires graph, it shows the lack of volatility in Forbes' Top 100 Billionaires – it's the same people, but getting older.
- If the trend continues, the average billionaire will be in their 70s by 2019 and over 100 by 2051.

SNAPSHOTS Back from the dead

When travelling in New Zealand, Matt Lindley, a London-based marketer, started thinking about the flightless moa bird, which was endemic there until it became extinct around 1300AD. This gave him the idea for the series Unknown Tourism, which commemorates lost wildlife with vintage-style posters inspired by 30s to 50s air-travel ads. The project, commissioned by the travel site Expedia UK and illustrated by Jon Barmby, includes the dodo as well as bringing to light the unfamiliar galliwasp. "These posters are a fun, visual way to convey that information to a lot of people," says Lindley. "We felt many of these animals weren't getting the attention they deserved, so this was a way of paying tribute to them."

Goal: Thank company for commissioning artwork that inspires people to think creatively about animal conservation and commemorate animals that have already gone extinct.

In an effort to raise awareness and funding for animal conservation, a travel company recently commissioned six vintage-style travel posters that beckon travelers to visit animals that have already gone extinct. Beyond having a hip retro design, the posters have started a conversation about currently endangered animals that are used to draw tourists to destinations. Hi Andy,

I apologise for the length of this email, there are literally dozens of hooks here and I have outlined them individually below with their own sub headings below in addition to the intro.

Take a look at this: <http://www.gocompare.com/money/billionaire-league/>

Imagine being able to look at the top 100 billionaires in the entire world for the last 20 years in order to see how the landscape has changed for them, their wealth, industries and their countries - to tell evolutionary stories if you will..

a. What if we told you we can prove conclusively that the number of self made top 100 billionaires is dropping fast compared with twenty years - begging questions of modern entrepreneurialism, or that the number of female top 100 billionaires has risen rapidly in recent years - by 50% in two decades and 33% since the recession fact?

b. What if we said we knew which top ten universities are most likely to make you a top 100 billionaire, and which degrees are most likely you to get you to the top of the world's richest? We have the full data for this.

c. Which top 100 billionaires have never dropped off the list? There are ten individuals who defied recessions and competitors to remain firmly on the top 100 lists for 20 years running - want to know who they are?

c. What about the education? Would you be interested to see what degrees and universities unite these guys? Or even more interesting, how many of them actually received no higher-education at all or dropped out. Interestingly, 25% of these supreme business people dropped out of education completely before making their wealth and science based degrees appear to be most popular.

d. How do industries stack up: Or what if we were able to show you how top 100 billionaires from the same industries stack up in wealth and how this has changed over twenty years? (Zuckerberg, Gates and Bezos in the tech arena and Bloomberg and Murdoch in the media realm)

e. It's in the stars: We bet you didn't know that Aquariuses are far more likely to make it to become a top 100 global billionaire or that Cancerians are least likely to ever make it onto the coveted list of ultimate moguls.

f. What about the fact that although the US reigns supreme, Germany and Russia nip at its heels in terms of the sheer number of top 100 billionaires over twenty years, as well as the total net worth of the ultimate moguls who are from these countries - but how does this look in graph form?

What am I offering?

There have been countless studies of individual additions of the Forbes top 100 lists, but Imagine being able to look at the top 100 billionaires from the last 20 years in order to look closely into how things have changed for these supreme moguls in the last two decades - evolutionary stories if you will. This is what makes this piece 100% unique and what sets it apart from other standard pieces on the topic.

This is a fully interactive piece that tells some fascinating stories that have been developed from the information that we have gathered from every single top 100 billionaire that has made it to the list since 1996. Take a look here: <http://www.gocompare.com/money/billionaire-league/>

We understand you may not want to embed a piece, but the headlines below could make for great standalone pieces. I have divided the hooks into trivial and more serious hooks so that you can scan read them, because I know you will be swamped - this is why I would be extremely honoured if you were to give this some time (please forgive the audacity).

Below I will outline an incredible mix of Trivial/entertainment focused and serious business hooks....

These news hooks include (there re a lot here and have all been given sub headers)

Trivial findings (there are far serious hooks below)

It's in the stars

.Aquariuses are far more likely to achieve status as a top 100 billionaire when looking at all of them and Cancerians are least likely.

The Bald Truth

The number of billionaires who are bald has risen dramatically potentially implying that bald entrepreneurs are more likely to make it to the coveted list.

Does Family life make the ultimate business man (or woman)

88% of these ultimate billionaires are married, begging the question as to whether significant others offer much needed support for success.

Almost a quarter (21%) never had children but a further quarter (25%) had as many as 4 - does avoiding starting a family lead to greater success or does a large family actually aid it?

Education

First up, I have the data that shows which universities are most frequented by these top 100 billionaires, and also have a full list of what they studied. incidentally, Bachelor and Master of Sciences are without doubt the most popular degrees amongst these supremely successful people. I can send you the sheet.

1. An entire quarter (25%) are college dropouts or received no higher-education at all
2. 23% obtained a Masters (16% higher than the US national average)
3. 47% have obtained a Bachelors (19% higher than the national average)
4. 6% have a Doctorate (3% above the US national average)

More serious but equally fascinating headlines

A. Self-made top billionaires are dwindling

The number of self-made billionaires has dropped 10% on 1996 - does this reflect the state of modern entrepreneurs?

B. Which top 100 billionaires have defied recessions and competition to remain firm on the list for 20 years without ever dropping off? There are ten people who have managed this.

B. Which top 100 billionaires have defied recessions and competition to remain firm on the list for 20 years without ever dropping off? There are ten people who have managed this.

C. How much money have these guys gained in twenty years?

In 1996 the top fortune from the list was $18.5 billions, Bill Gates was holding that wealth back then, with that same wealth you would only make it to position 50 in 2015.

D. Average age: The average age of top 100 billionaires has dropped 5 years in 12 months - but how else has this changed over time?

E. Females break the glass ceiling

Females in the top 100 are breaking the glass ceiling: the number of female billionaires has risen 50% in 20 years and 33% since the recession.

F. America reigns supreme when it comes to top 100 billionaires but who follows?

The total net-worth of American billionaires in Forbes Top 100 has increased by a staggering 641% in the last two decades.

- Since the financial crisis, they have defied the downturn, increasing total net worth by 90%

G. Which nations (in terms of their top 100 billionaires) defied the recession and which were hit hardest? But more than that, which made the best recovery?

British top 100 billionaires defied the recession: The UK came out of the crash strongest in terms of net worth lost, losing the least and even gained a billionaire - they increased their overall net worth by 185% in the 8 years following the crash.

Russia was hit hardest (losing 85% of its net worth), but made the quickest recovery - a staggering 486% increase in the 8 years after the crash.

H. What countries have most billionaires?

Of course US leads the way with 40 billionaires (up from 29 in 1996), but Russia and Germany nip at its heels but with markedly less (8 for Germany and 6 for Russia) while China has 4 - the United Kingdom has 3 (pretty impressive given that it's the smallest).

I. Murdoch's phone hacking may have stunted his financial growth while Presidential links may have accelerated Bloomberg's

When looking at the media giants (Murdoch Vs Bloomberg), Bloomberg's 33.5bn eclipses Murdoch's 13.9bn. Other things to come out of the comparison between these two:

- Murdoch lost half his wealth to the recession while Bloomberg increased his wealth by 45% in a single year after the recession and by 218% in the 8 years after the crash. Was this down to the fact he was frequently suggested by the media to be in the running for a strong presidential campaign around this time? figures would suggest so.

- We could also feasibly suggest that the phone hacking scandal could well have stunted and limited Murdoch's recovery from the recession, because again, the figures and tie in dates would suggest so (phone hacking findings came to a head in 2011).

J. How do the supreme mogules from certain industries stack up?

From Bezos and Zuckerberg in the technology arena and how they compare in wealth over time, with the Google founders and even the ultimate tech Daddy that is Bill Gates, through to the media giants like Murdoch and Bloomberg and how external factors such as phone hacking as Presidency links have stunted or accelerated their wealth over the last two decades.

Let me know what you think. If it helps I can send you a fact sheet answering all of the questions so that it is all there for you. Please also let me know if you aren't sure how to use it. I would also be happy to supply you with imagery or content if you need.

OMG WHAT? RIGHT.

to James, Julia, me

Hi James,

You've got my attention with this brilliant release. Wish all PRs sent something like this.

I've cc'd our money team because I think there may be something in it for them.

Cheers
