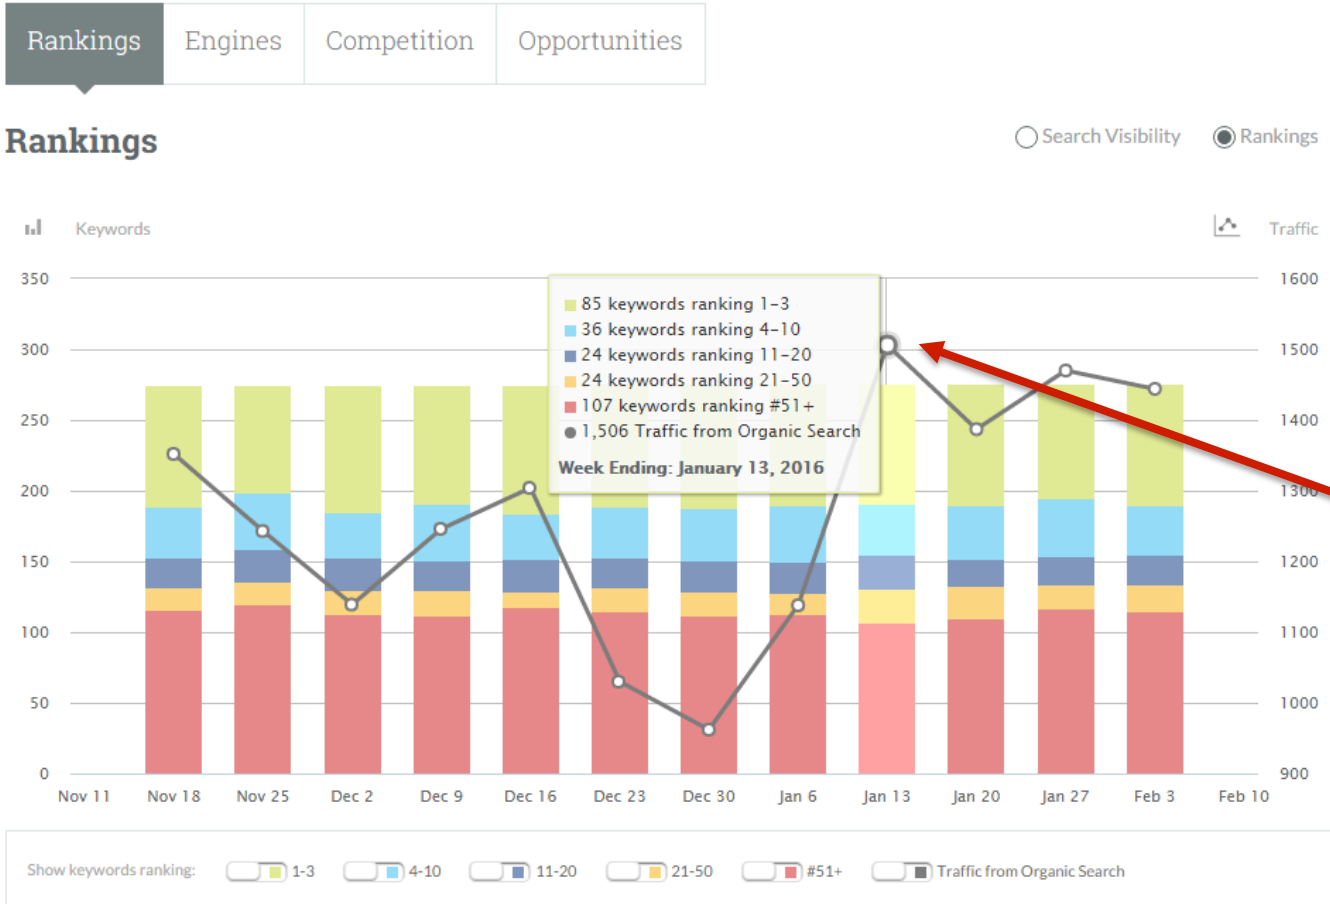
Focusing on Outcome Metrics vs. Inputs Will Bring Success



This is a great report, but it tells me nothing about the work that went into improving rankings.

What If We're Wrong?

3 Goals of Analytics

1) Reporting (aka measuring success & failure)

2) Diagnosing (aka finding what caused change)

3) Generating Targets (aka uncovering which inputs are required to produce successful outcomes)

What's So Special About Ikaria?

The Island Where People Forget to Die

By DAN BUETTNER OCT. 24, 2012

If you pay careful attention to the way Ikarians have lived their lives, it appears that a dozen subtly powerful, mutually enhancing and pervasive factors are at work. It's easy to get enough rest if no one else wakes up early and the village goes dead during afternoon naptime. It helps that the cheapest, most accessible foods are also the most healthful — and that your ancestors have spent centuries developing ways to make them taste good. It's hard to get through the day in Ikaria without walking up 20 hills. You're not likely to ever feel the existential pain of not belonging or even the simple stress of arriving late. Your community makes sure you'll always have something to eat, but peer pressure will get you to contribute something too. You're going to grow a garden, because that's what your parents did, and that's what your neighbors are doing. You're less likely to be a victim of crime because everyone at once is a busybody and feels as if he's being watched. At day's end, you'll share a cup of the seasonal herbal tea with your neighbor because that's what he's serving. Several glasses of wine may follow the tea, but you'll drink them in the company of good friends. On Sunday, you'll attend church, and you'll fast before Orthodox feast days. Even if you're antisocial, you'll never be entirely alone. Your neighbors will cajole you out of your house for the village festival to eat your portion of goat meat.

The Magic of 10,000 Steps

BY FITBIT STAFF

When you join Fitbit, the default goal we set for each member is the magical number of 10,000 steps a day (you can also choose to customize your goal). And while this may not be the first time you've heard that goal, it might be more meaningful, and motivating, to understand its origins.

The Japanese first started using the 10,000 steps a day number, as part of a marketing campaign! (to help sell pedometers). Since that initial campaign however, medical authorities around the world have agreed that 10,000 is a healthy number for which to aim. The American Heart Association uses the 10,000 steps metric as a guideline to follow for improving health and decreasing risk of heart disease, the number one killer of men and women in America.

10,000 steps a day is a rough equivalent to the Surgeon General's recommendation to accumulate 30 minutes of activity most days of the week. It should be enough to reduce your risk for disease and help you lead a longer, healthier life. The benefits are many: lower BMI, reduced waist size, increased energy, and less risk for Type II diabetes and heart disease. In fact, a recent study of the 10,000 steps a day method reported conclusive health benefits.

Resting heart rate is a strong predictor of health & longevity. This is the work that correlates.

Via Cardiogr.am's Blog

These lines show me the daily goal for WORK, not just a goal for results.

This is what's missing from our current approach to marketing analytics.

We measure the results.

We ignore the inputs that create those results.

KIM KIA PAN MEE SPECIALIST 金仔板面 @ TAMAN BATU, KEPONG

Kim Kia sells pan mee and pan mee only. That's why they call themselves the pan mee specialist. It used to be a stall but with the overwhelming support of their customers, they moved into a proper shop located just a stone's throw away from its original spot. Waiting time could get excruciating so make sure you are not in a hurry before eating here.

LINE CLEAR NASI KANDAR RESTAURANT @ KAMPUNG BARU, KL

Well, this is surprising. I did not have the slightest clue that the famous Line Clear nasi kandar will relocate to Kampung Baru after they were ordered to vacate their original premise in Penang.
Today is the second day of their operation in the new outlet, so I decided to drop by to check it out. I also read from the news that 70% of the kitchen team has moved here, which include the cook himself.

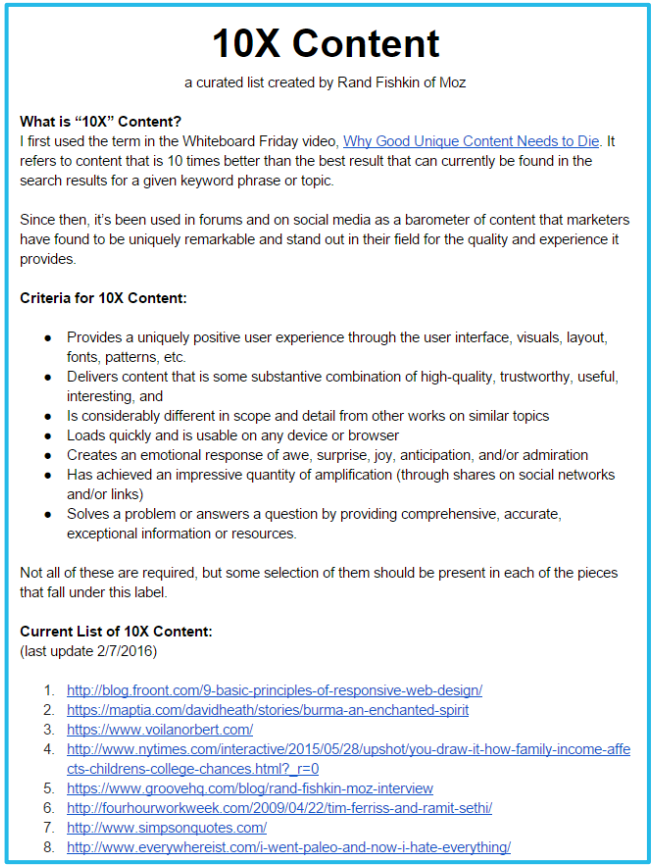
Inconsistent, Higher-Effort Content?



10X Content

a curated list created by Rand Fishkin of Moz

What is "10X" Content?
I first used the term in the Whiteboard Friday video, Why Good Unique Content Needs to Die. It refers to content that is 10 times better than the best result that can currently be found in the search results for a given keyword phrase or topic.

Since then, it's been used in forums and on social media as a barometer of content that marketers have found to be uniquely remarkable and stand out in their field for the quality and experience it provides.

Criteria for 10X Content:

- Provides a uniquely positive user experience through the user interface, visuals, layout, fonts, patterns, etc.
- Delivers content that is some substantive combination of high-quality, trustworthy, useful, interesting, and
- Is considerably different in scope and detail from other works on similar topics
- Loads quickly and is usable on any device or browser
- Creates an emotional response of awe, surprise, joy, anticipation, and/or admiration
- Has achieved an impressive quantity of amplification (through shares on social networks and/or links)
- Solves a problem or answers a question by providing comprehensive, accurate, exceptional information or resources.

Not all of these are required, but some selection of them should be present in each of the pieces that fall under this label.

Current List of 10X Content:

Any idea where one can get the syrup that is used in ice kachang in Singapore? It has a distinct flavor that I can't place. And are fresh pandan leaves or extract available anywhere? I talked to the guy who runs the Thai grocery store on Mosco St. and he said that he hasn't been able to get pandan extract from his suppliers in a while. While we're at it, why not wish for some fresh kalamansi? :-) It's more Filipino than Singaporean, but I recall having some great noodles with fresh kalamansi out in Ponggol and have never stopped looking for the recipe.

@metaphora You could probably make it yourself with good palm sugar. Dissolve into a thick syrup, boil with pandan, star anise, maybe some coriander.

Last I checked Bangkok on Mosco sells frozen pandan leaves, and they're pretty good. As for calamansi, I feel you! The canned stuff isn't the same.

@metaphora - I thought I saw some ice syrup in HK Supermarket once last year. Not sure if they still sell it though.

@Max is calamansi similar to the kumquat then?

@metaphora, for Filipino foodstuffs (and among those, extremely bright colors found in jars) you may want to get to Phil-Am Foods in Woodside (or this website: http://www.philamfood.com/).
Fans of ube, the small Filipino stretch on Roosevelt Ave. may cheer you up.

"Located on a stretch of Grand Street littered with un-notable restaurants"

Looks like it's right across the street from Samurai Mama, which is a fantastic restaurant that makes home made udon and some of the best gyoza I've ever had, including those I've had in Japan. So, not entirely littered with un-notable restaurants, I'd say.

i wouldn't say that stretch is terribly unremarkable as far as restaurants go... snacky is always reliable for pan-asian stoner food; cadaques was (not sure about now) solid spanish/tapas and that korean place across the street has been doing solid business for years. there are worse blocks in williamsburg for dining options.

Actually, roti paired with sweet accompaniments has been around in Singapore for a minute, and I'm pretty sure in Malaysia too. IMO part of the fun of any blank slate food format is invention and room to play. Check out this prata ("roti prata" is the more common phrase used in Singapore) infographic:
http://www.ladolcevitacooking.com/pratalogy-infographic
And if plain roti is ordered, the curry that comes with, in my experience, is usually a vegetable curry...if you want chicken curry you have to order it as an extra side. I don't recall having been served curry with generous chicken pieces in NYC's Malaysian restaurants either.

Now all that's left is for someone to comment and say that everything's better in Malaysia v Singapore...

456 on Mott Street has the best fried dumplings (pork) and Rice cake. Jing Fong is a good place for Dim Sum.New York Noodle Town has very good roast meats (Duck, bbq pork, chicken). Nom Wah is a tourist trap and so is Shanghai Joe's.

I never got a chance to visit the Chinatown, New York but going there first time with chinatown bus from boston to nyc for an official trip.I have chosen the services of http://www.getbustours.com/east-coast-6-days-deluxe-tour-from-new-york-the-grand-east-coast.html. I was little confused about my stay there. Now I must enjoy the services of New York Noodle Town. I hope I must enjoy the service of this Chinatown restaurant.
